Harlan J. Berk, Ltd. has presented an innovation in antiquities and numismatics for some time now. The system is simple. When you want an antiquity or coin in the sale, just bid the estimated price by phone or mail. We will send you the antiquity or coin immediately. No waiting for the closing of the sale. Any and all antiquities or coins not sold before the closing date will sent to the highest bidder on September 13, 1995.

EXAMPLE—You bid estimate on an item valued at $100.00 and if your bid is the 1st to reach us, you will receive the item immediately. If on the other hand, you bid $75.00 on the same and are still the high bidder at the end of the sale, the item will be mailed to you on the closing date, September 13, 1995.

If you are ever in the area, stop in to see us! Of course, it's best to call first. Harlan J. Berk, Ltd. reserves the right to refuse any ridiculous bids.

GOLD STATER OF THE FIRST SICILIAN SLAVE REVOLT

The events of the First Sicilian Slave Revolt are well documented by Diodorus Siculus and other ancient authors. It erupted about 135 BC in Roman Sicily, as a violent repudiation of the Romans' appalling treatment of their agricultural slaves, many of whom were freeborn but kidnapped and sold into slavery. The central figure of the revolt was Eunus, a slave of Syrian origin who claimed divine sanction for his actions. He modelled his revolutionary government after the court of Seleucid Syria, assuming the royal title for himself along with the throne name Antiochus. It is clear that the allusion was to Rome's great antagonist Antiochus III the Great, for Eunus' principal advisors also assumed the names of famous ministers of Antiochus III.

The numismatic legacy of the First Sicilian Slave Revolt includes two gold staters with the portrait of Eunus-Antiochus, though not bearing his name, and a small body of bronze coinage which names "King Antiochus" as issuing authority. The bronze types include royal portraits comparable to those which appear on the gold staters, and other types honoring Demeter, the goddess of agriculture and in all probability the divine patroness of the revolt. One of these bronzes of King Antiochus has been known since the nineteenth century.

Precious metal coinage had not been struck on a regular basis in Sicily since the late third century, and workmen with appropriate skills were probably concentrated in Syracuse, a city which never fell to the rebels. Thus the coinage of Eunus-Antiochus may have been produced by the captured armorers, blacksmiths, and other artisans whose lives were spared primarily so that they might make weapons for the rebel army. Our stater, which we believe to be the first issue of Eunus-Antiochus, reflects the inexperience of the irregular mint in its generally crude style, and especially in the transposition of obverse and reverse (contrary to custom, the royal portrait appears on the reverse).

In opposition to the workmanship, the types of Eunus' coinage reveal a knowledge of history and a sophisticated understanding of symbolism. The portrait is a typical image of Hellenistic divine kingship, with the diadem of royalty and the subject's features idealized to suggest godhood. The obverse of our stater, a militant figure seated on a pile of arms, is a barbarized adaptation of the reverse type of the Aetolian League, facing left instead of right. Aetolian League coinage definitely reached Sicily and has been found in the environs of the rebel capital, Enna (IGCH 2232). The reversal of the design is probably the result of naive copying from an existing coin directly into the die. The type recalls the fact that it was the Aetolian League which in 192 B.C. invited Antiochus III of Syria to liberate Greece from Roman domination.

The puzzling inscription ΠΤΑΛΙΤΙΟC can best be interpreted in light of a second gold stater of Eunus published by G. Manganaro in Museum Helveticum 47 (1990), pp. 183-185. It bears a related legend, ΦΛΑΙΤΙΘΙΟN, a slightly misspelled form of "Philippeion". Manganaro presents evidence that the term "Philippeion" was used for Attic-weight gold staters, regardless of their types, from the reign of Philip of Macedon down to the time of T. Quinctius Flamininus. The two inscriptions represent successive approximations to the correct term. This labelling of the gold to identify its denomination may have been a practical necessity, since the minting of Sicilian Greek coins had ceased decades earlier. But these legends also evoked the tradition of crusading Hellenistic kingship and its perpetual cause, the promotion or defense of Greek culture in the face of barbarism. The very decision to mint coins on a Greek weight standard, employing Greek types and the Greek language, represents an attempt to reassert Hellenic values in a time and place that had fallen thrall to Rome.

For a fuller account of the events of the First Sicilian Slave War, see Harlan Berk and Simon Bendall, "Eunus/Antiochus: slave revolt in Sicily, The Celator," vol. 8, no. 2, February 1994, pp. 6-8; for more detailed discussion of Eunus' coin types and their symbolism, see Cathy Lorber, "Image and Symbol on Artifacts of the First Sicilian Slave Revolt," Harlan J. BACTRIA, EUTHYDEMUS; 230-190 BC, Gold Stater, 8.14g; Bopearachchi-53.H, Mitchiner-84A. Very rare. Mint State . . . . . 18250

GOLD STATER OF EUTHYDEMUS I OF BACTRIA

Euthydemus I was an usurper who displaced the line of Diodotus, the original founder of the independent Bactrian kingdom. The date of Euthydemus' usurpation is unknown. But by 208-206 B.C. he was well established, for he was able to withstand a two-year siege of his capital Bactra by Antiochus the Great. Forced to withdraw without a victory, the Seleucid formally recognized Euthydemus' royal status.

On his coinage Euthydemus replaced the militant Zeus of the Diodoti with a personal type, the weary Heracles seated pensively on a pile of rocks, resting after his labors. This design was inspired by a famous statue created by Lysippus for Alexander the Great, known as the Heracles Epitrapezios (Heracles upon the Table) because it was reduced to statuette size and used as a table ornament in Rome in the first century A.D. This famous sculpture also spawned many numismatic adaptions. The parallel types on coinage have prompted some scholars to suggest that Euthydemus adopted the Heracles type to pay homage to his family's Aeolian origin in Western Asia Minor. More likely, however, he was attempting to position himself as a legitimate heir of Alexander the Great, who had conquered Bactria and introduced Greek culture there.

Euthydemus' rare gold staters share their controls with the late coinage of Diodotus II. This suggests that they belong early in his reign. By this time, gold coinage had become exceptional, struck only on occasions of special importance. Euthydemus' sole issue of gold staters was probably struck to celebrate his accession, and to help insure the loyalty of key elements - especially the military - to the new king.

CARTHAGIAN "HORSE and PALM" BILLON COINS
The following selection of billon coins is from a North African hoard of about 250 pieces, some of which are the finest examples in the hoard. Others just represent different types. This variety, with the reverse type of a horse superimposed on a palm tree, has not received the focussed attention of numismatic scholars, though examples have been published in collections, and representative specimens have been illustrated as appendages to various specialized studies. In some references the horse and palm tree billon is dated as early as the First Punic War (264-24 B.C.), or to the Libyan War (241-238 B.C.). However recent metallurgical analyse have shown that these horse and palm coins, with a silver content of only 15-15% are more debased than the coinage of the Libyan War and therefore later (Carradic and La Niece, NC 1988, pp. 42, 46).

The hoard contents can be broadly classified into three groups. The first features large Tanit head on the obverse and often a pellet under the horse on the revers (lots 218-220). Similar pellets appear on the gold and electrum coinage studied by Jenkins and Lewis; die linkage indicates that for the billon, at least these pellets are issue markers. A second variety features a smaller Tanit head on a distinctive flan cast in a double-sided mould so that the edges are bevelled on both sides and join at a ridge (lots 221-226). The principal special feature of this group is the sign of Tan which appears on both sides of a small number of specimens (lot 222). A third variety features a variant obverse type in place of the traditional Tanit head - a young woman of less "Punic" aspect, with straight hair loosely rolled on the back of her neck (lots 215-217). The Tanit head, of course, was based on Sicilian models but has many decades to evolve; the new type may reflect more recent Greek inspiration Jenkins, Essays Mildenberg, pp. 134-135, has pointed out that the young head type occurs on Carthaginian coins recovered from South Italian hoards and on South Italian coins struck for Hannibal, which he associates with the last phase of the war in Italy when Hannibal was bottled up in Bruttium, 209-208 B.C. Carthage apparently placed this same head on very debased currency intended for domestic use, while simultaneously producing fine coinage for shipment to Hannibal in Italy.

We are currently studying this hoard in detail for purposes of publication. We have identified about a dozen different subvarieties. We hope that our study will establish the sequence of issue and perhaps enable us to propose more precise dates, as we are tracing the development of mint technique and perhaps clarifying the weight standard.

788. Roman Marble Cinerary Urn; Late 1st-2nd Century AD. In the Greek centres of Athens and the cities of Asia Minor, a highly organized trade in marble sarcophagi was established. The Athenian workshops, turning out fine quality sarcophagi with figured sculptural relief, exported their work in an unfinished state, leaving their agents in provincial towns to arrange the completion of the relief work. A pristine carved piece which exhibits wonderful detail throughout. The main cavity carved with rams and theatre masks with foliage between. Centering the piece lies the inscription: From Proba Mercantilla to her darling son Avitus, whom she has laid to rest in his tomb with tears and balsam. The pediment is decorated with two stylized rhytons filled with flowers. On the top of the urn's lid is a hole where oils were probably placed in worshipping practices. The back of the piece is left unfinished in a half-moon shape. 10" High, 14 1/2" Wide 20000
